

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An unstable receptacle for storing a volume of a liquid, including a container and a closure arrangement. The container has an opening. The container is configured for holding the volume of the liquid. The container is formed, such that, when the container is placed in any orientation upon a level
5 surface at least a third of the volume of the liquid spills out of the container. The closure arrangement is configured to seal the container.